Good news from the editorial board!

A few years ago the editorial board of Geophysica set up a goal to catch up the long lasting delay in printing out the issues. The problem deteriorated when Geophysica adopted a referee system in 1989. Although the reference process itself was considered positive it resulted in a situation in which the editorial board did not manage to keep up with a strict time schedule for the new system. During the course of the past years, the delay has now been overcome. Therefore we are glad to announce that the first issue of volume 31 (1995) will be published in the spring of 1995 and the second issue correspondingly in the autumn of 1995.

Also in the near future, the editorial board hopes to receive research papers, review articles, notes and short communications on all geophysical subjects. We all make this journal together, the editors, the authors and all those who find it important to have an appropriate documentation of our research. For a good result, a contribution of all of us is needed.
